Director of Instructional Design

Adams Center for Teaching and Learning

Faculty Support & Instructional Design

- Consult with faculty to design, redesign, and evaluate courses using evidence-based pedagogical practices.
- Support course development across modalities (face-to-face, hybrid, and online), aligning learning outcomes, assessments, and instructional activities.
- Provide one-on-one consultations, workshops, and resources related to course design, assessment, inclusive teaching, and student engagement.
- Collaborate with academic departments and teaching committees to support curricular and instructional initiatives.

Artificial Intelligence in Teaching & Learning

- Serve as a campus resource for the pedagogical use of AI tools in teaching and learning.
- Help faculty thoughtfully integrate AI into courses in ways that align with learning goals, disciplinary norms, academic integrity, and institutional mission.
- Develop and facilitate workshops, guides, and examples addressing AI literacy, ethical considerations, assignment design, and assessment practices.

- Stay current with emerging AI technologies and trends relevant to higher education and translate these developments into practical, faculty-friendly guidance.

Conference Programming

- Coordinate the planning and execution of a biannual national teaching conference focused on best practices in Christian higher education.
- Work with the Assistant Provost and Communication and Events Specialist to manage all aspects of the conference, including program development, speaker coordination, proposals and review processes, logistics, and budget.
- Collaborate with internal and external partners to ensure the conference reflects current pedagogical scholarship and the institution's Christian mission.

ACU does not unlawfully discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, sex, disability, genetic information, national or ethnic origin in employment opportunities, in keeping with applicable state and federal law.

ACU is committed to maintaining a safe and secure campus environment and protecting the university's financial and physical assets.
